The Vital Issue.

Among the many pointed and intelligent questions concerning the half-and-half plan propounded at yesterday's meeting of the Pastors' Federation were those which developed the thought that too much money for District needs is or will be raised under the half-and-half plan, and the suggestion that in the best interests of the District its revenue from liquor licenses should not be duplicated by the nation. It has been shown clearly that the "surpluses" of the last few years have been artificially constructed, in violation of existing law, and do not represent any real excess of revenue over genuine and urgent needs of the capital municipality. But it is also recognized that the steady increase in the already heavy realty taxes and the possible addition of new taxes may hereafter result in the raising of more revenue than the sum equivalent to one-half of the capital's annual needs. In this event it has been urged in The Star's editorial correspondence and it has been suggested at the hearings before the joint congressional committee that a surplus be prevented by omitting the half-million revenue from liquor licenses from duplication under the half-and-half plan, thus killing two birds with one stone.

There are many who agree with the prohibitionists as to the bad policy of duplicating liquor license money under the half-and-half plan and would unite with them to eliminate this revenue from such duplication. On the other hand, there is no other class of Washingtonians which is more clearly interested in maintenance of the half-and-half plan, thus modified, than the prohibitionists. The loss of revenue under prohibition, which might easily be conceived as bearable by the local taxpayers if under the continued half-and-half plan the nation contributed annually to capital upbuilding a certain definite sum, proportioned to local property taxes, and amounting to six or seven million dollars, would loom mountain high as a threat to the local community of excessive taxation on other lines, if through destruction of the half-and-half law the national contribution were reduced in amount and rendered fluctuating and uncertain. The local taxpayers might spare the revenue from liquor licenses, but they could not spare the equitable, definite, national contribution under the half-and-half plan as revised and brought up to date.

Projects for moral betterment always suffer first when on account of a shortage in municipal revenue provision for meeting some of the city needs must be omitted. The strongest advocates of a certain definite and equitable national contribution toward capital upbuilding should be those of us who are sincerely concerned in such moral betterment. Washingtonians should not be confused as to the vital issue in this discussion. It is the issue raised by the House in the last Congress when, misled into erroneous beliefs by untruths concerning the taxable resources and tax burdens of Washingtonians, it sought to repeal the half-and-half law in order to double the present tax burden of the local community. At the recent hearings Washington has demonstrated the falsity of the alleged facts upon which this belief and this action of the House were based. In resisting this unjust and ruin-threatening attack practically all Washingtonians stand together. We ought not to weaken the vital issue by exploiting unduly our individual theories and "fads" and by wrangling over minor details.

The Speakership.

There is now before us an exhibition of the great change made four years ago when the office of Speaker of the House was stripped of all real power, and its occupant left with nothing but the gavel in his hand. Until then the speakership had been second in importance only to the presidency. Since then it has possessed next to no importance at all. It would have been quite lost to view except for the man occupying it. He has conferred distinction upon it, rather than it upon him.

The House is assembling at a time of the utmost gravity. Not two or three, but many things are pressing for attention. It is a time when not only every member should do his duty, but should be assigned so as to give the country the best that is in him. No square peg should be put into a round hole, no round peg into a square hole. Every piece of the machine should be in its proper place. But what do we see? One of the most experienced members of the body, its most effective orator, and one of its most striking and interesting personalities, assigned to the duties of a presiding officer, with his talents limited to exercise over points of order and to the putting of motions to adjourn. Could anything be less logical or less businesslike? Was ever before so much good legislative material wasted?

Of course, Mr. Clark can descend to the floor and speak on any subject that appeals to him; can record his vote on any question that comes up; can make suggestions to any member or any committee on any matter in hand. But such privileges do not cancel the fact that, as he is left by the present arrangement, he must "butt in," or wait for an invitation. Nothing is expected of him on his own initiative.

Take the case of preparedness. It is reasonably certain that had not the President invited him, Mr. Clark would not have called at the White House to discuss the most important issue of the day. And it so happens that on that issue Mr. Clark is in agreement with the President and public sentiment, while the man who under the new arrangement is the leader of the House is in opposition. This change because of the clamor the democrats had made against what they called "Cannonism." But that clamor had also embraced "gag rule," and yet as to that they have copied the republicans most faithfully. Why make fish of one feature of "Cannonism" and flesh of another?

Democratic Preliminaries. Harmony is a mighty good watchword, and the democrats in Congress need it in their business. Can they employ it successfully through the session? There will be much use for it in both houses.

In the Senate caucus a start was made yesterday by the re-election of Mr. Kern to the majority leadership of the Senate. It was decided that one satisfactory term deserved another. The Indiana senator is in complete accord with the administration, and will be in confidential communication with the President as the different questions come up. Team work between the two is assured. Moreover, the honor conferred will probably help Mr. Kern in his campaign next year for a second term in the Senate. The Indiana situation is a bit disquieting for the democrats, and Mr. Kern will need the help.

Tomorrow it is expected, Mr. Clarke of Arkansas will be chosen for a second term as Vice President pro tempore. Some doubt has been thrown about Mr. Clarke's case owing to his action in the last Congress on the ship-purchase bill. He led the democratic opposition which defeated that measure, and there has been no announcement of a change of opinion on his part. Will he oppose the measure again? It is understood he will have the chance.

Another very interesting question is this: Will Mr. Clarke support cloture? and, if in the chair when the question comes up, will he rule in favor of the proposition? It is announced that, owing to his wife's illness, Vice President Marshall will not be present when the Senate convenes, and may not be in his place for some days later.

Mr. Clarke, if presiding, will confront a two-fold embarrassment. As the temporary occupant of the chair he will be called upon to rule upon motions of permanent and far-reaching importance, and at the same time to bind his own hands as a member of the Senate in favor of a ship-purchase bill possessing the same character to which he objected in the last Congress. For there is a widespread belief that cloture at this time has particularly to do with passing the ship-purchase bill.

The House democrats are consulting behind closed doors, and have anything but an easy job. With all the care the committee on committees may take, it is certain not to discharge its duty without inflicting some pain. Old members will want advancement and new members a fine start, and everybody cannot be pleased.

As a politician with his ear to the ground King Constantine of Greece might set an example even to the most alert and enterprising campaigner.

If any submarine sinks the Oscar II there will be no chance of contending that the ship was armed or carrying a munition cargo.

When it comes to his place on the Roosevelt republican ticket Col. Roosevelt looks something like a standpatter.

Henry Ford's peace ship has taken the place of his motor car as a jestful topic for some of the irreverently inclined. Freedom of speech is one of the most cherished of human liberties; and one of the most sadly over-worked.

The Imperial Meeting at Vienna. From Berlin is announced a visit paid by Emperor William to Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria at the latter's castle in Vienna. The particular interest in this matter lies in the fact that it was the first meeting of the two monarchs since the opening of the war. The German kaiser has been so busy on his various fighting fronts that he has not had time to journey to Austria to confer with his ally, while the latter has been in ill-health and too feeble to travel himself. The suggestion immediately arises that there is some particular occasion for this conference, and speculation, always speedy, has already coupled the imperial visit with the report that Austria, contrary to Germany's wish and policy, is secretly seeking to make a separate peace with all of the allies. Such reports are likely to develop and circulate at any time during a conflict of this character. The chances are always against their truthfulness. At any rate, it may be assumed that if there is any substance whatsoever in the suggestion that Austria is seeking the basis of separate agreement with the allies Emperor William will do his utmost, and probably successfully, in the course of his visit to Vienna to stop such a procedure. Austria is in no position to make peace against the wish of her powerful ally, without whose aid she would now have been crushed under the Russian steamroller.

Peace that relies on a defenseless condition to shame possible aggression into magnanimity constitutes rather a humble plea. Peace with preparedness would constitute an example of forbearance to be proud of.

When Great Britain decided she wanted Canada's wheat she did not wait for speculators to get together and try to make arrangements as to the price.

As a prudent statesman, it is Carranza's duty to make a prompt showing in Mexico that will prove his worthiness of the recognition so eagerly sought.

The office that seeks the man wants to bring along a guarantee if it hopes to appeal to the modern statesman already enjoying comfortable prospects.

Ocean conditions are such as to make it unlikely that Sir Thomas Lipton's plucky enterprise will be heard from in a long time.

SHOOTING STARS.

BY PHILANDER JOHNSON.

Migration.

"Haven't you a church in Crimson Gulch?" "We did have one," replied Broncho Bob; "but we had to give it up. The town couldn't stand it."

"Didn't you show it proper respect?" "All kinds. Nobody liked to play cards or holler up to the barkeep with a church so near. So as a matter of respect every Sunday the boys all shook Crimson Gulch and transferred the entire business of the town to Bearcat Center."

Different.

"They say marriage is a lottery," remarked the morose young man. "It isn't," replied Miss Cayenne. "In a lottery you can go on buying tickets."

The Busy Life.

I love to loaf the livelong day. I guard 'gainst stimulating mirth And read to pass the hours away About Efficiency's great worth.

Appropriate Title.

"What do you think we ought to call our peace ship?" inquired the skipper. "Let's follow the system by which submarines are named," replied the mate. "Some's call it the B-9."

Notable Product.

"I hear Nebraska mentioned very frequently," commented the distinguished stranger. "Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "Nebraska is a great and enterprising state."

"What is it famous for?" "Well, I haven't posted myself very accurately on its commercial and social side. Politics is my study. And so far as politics is concerned Nebraska is largely famous for unfinished business."

Reminders.

When de days is gittin' glummer An' de froaty breezes fly, A little bit 'o' summer Comes a smilin' in de sky; A little bit 'o' shinin' Like we had when treetops 'jinin' Sheltered birds beneath their twinin' P'um de hotness of July.

British Censor.

The British censor is being greatly criticized, but our idea of a British censor is a man who positively hates just that sort of thing.

English Toys.

England also has a boom in the manufacture of Christmas toys, having previously like most of the other western nations, bought most of its Christmas toys in Germany.

His Constituents.

From the New York Sun. "Wall would it be if every congressman about to set out for Washington should realize that at this crisis in the history of the nation his constituents number over a hundred million American citizens."

Connoisseurs, lovers of art and beauty and seekers of the finest and most exclusive Christmas Gifts are extended a special invitation to visit and critically inspect the many beautiful things included in this Christmas exhibition, which we have just completed. It is an assemblage worthy of this store and its clientele, and for which we are indebted to the whole world.

This exhibition is held later this year than it has been heretofore, but we believe it will be of greater helpfulness to Christmas shoppers on this account—placing before them the absolutely new and the exclusive and elegant at a time when they are interested in buying for their friends and relatives.

We advise choosing now—it is none too early, and there are many one-of-a-kind and exclusive articles that will never be shown again, and are impossible of duplication, which fact adds much to their appreciable value. Gifts selected now will be held until delivery is desired.

The exhibition will occur in the respective departments, Main and Second Floors, but today we devote our entire announcement to that found on the Main floor. There are hundreds of fascinating gift things unobtainable elsewhere, which we do not mention.
